

North Troms Museum is an ecomuseum with responsibility for the six municipalities Storfjord, Lyngen, Kåfjord, Skjervøy, Nordreisa and Kvænangen in North-Norway. The region is inhabited by the indigenous Sámi, the ethnic minority Kven and the majority population of Norwegians. North Troms Museum's main goal is to acquire, conserve, research, communicate and exhibit material and immaterial culture that relates to these groups.

From Maursund

In line with the eco-museum concept, the museum does not consist of one single building with exhibitions. Since 1978 the museum has restored more than 90 buildings, of which 30 now is open to the public. Amongst these buildings is one farmstead in each of the municipalities and each farm shows different aspects of the culture of Northern Troms, from fisher-farmer subsistence, to Saami and Kven way of life, from rich to poor.

Traditional Sámi boat

In the Norce project North Troms Museum will be working with too local projects, use of traditional Sámi boat in the tourist business, and bring up the use of traditional food in the same business.

In the bout project have we ordered a copy of a traditional Sámi bout from the fjords of North -Troms. The bout will be delivered in July. In the project period we start too use the bout in cooperation whit local tourist operators.

In the food project have we made a new menu for use in the museum. Together with local tourist operators have we of the needs for serving in our business. We have together with local producers started too develop new menus and products grounded on traditional recipes.
